Curzon, the runner-up in the Derby, is a half-hred borse, which, like several others of his kind, could do no better than run into second place. He is by Ocean Wave (also dead), out of Tib (winner of the Steward's Cup at Goodwood), by Tibthorpe; second dam Nelly Rose, by Newminster; third dam the dam of Birdhill (also winner of the Steward's Cup), by Melbourne. Further pedigree is unknown.

late Baron Churchill, of Lancashire. The estate is worth $1,000,000, and Druce says he is the son of the Baron, and was kid-napped about forty years ago. His story is this:

Baron Churchill and his wife were un-remitting in their efforts to find their child, but, falling to discover any clue of him, became convinced that he was dead. Soon after the heartbroken mother died.

dead. Soon after the heartbroken mother died.

Before Edwin had reached the age of fifteen be was sent to the mills by James Druce, and when he reached his majority James Druce told him he wanted him to marry one of two girls he had aiways looked on as his sisters. Just at this time a letter arrived for Edwin, which contained information as to his birth. It had been sent by some one acquainted with the facts, and who desired to see justice done to the young man. This letter was intercepted by James Druce, but the girl the father had intended the young man to marry learned that it contained facts concerning her adopted brother's birth, and acquainted him with the information in her possession. Edwin demanded to know the names of his parents, but James Druce declared that he was his son, and Edwin left the Druce homestead, obtained employment as a mail carrier, afterwards went to Canada and moved to Scranton five years ago. He had been in Scranton only a short time when James Druce arrived. A truce was patched up, and Edwin and the man he once thought was his father, lived together.

TOLD PART OF THE STORY. TOLD PART OF THE STORY.

James Druce became very ill two years ago and told Edwin that the latter had been stolen when a youth, and gave a partial description of the catale his father owned in England and the family coat of arms. Then he suddenly stopped, and nothing could induce him to continue the story. Presently he recovered, but never disclosed the secret to Edwin. With the assistance of George Hicks, a friend, Edwin got some money and salled for his native land. A letter from Edwin was received by Hicks recently, which described the progress of his search Edwin was received by Hicks recently, which described the progress of his search for information. He is now boarding with Mrs. Fender, of No. 133 Sunny lane, Mosley. In his letter he said he was in possession of the story of his life. One of the women who assisted in his kidnapping had ded while he was in America, but had confessed her part in the transaction. Edwin's object now is to find Thomas Druce,

Something About Lord Rosebery's Horses-Sir Visto and His Dam. The New York Sun appends the following to its telegraphic account of the Der which was won by Lord Rosebery's

Sir Visto started only twice last year

Sir Visto started only twice last year. At his first appearance he ran unplaced in the Woodcote Stakes, three quarters of a mile, at Epsom, but in the fall he won at Kempton Park the Imperial Produce Stakes of 43.39, distance one mile, defeating Float, Galectita, Speedwell, and other good ones. Sir Visto did not begin his year-old career auspiciously. He ran third in the 2,600 Guineas, Kirkconnel winning, with Solaro second. His next start was in the valuable Newmarket Stakes, where he occupied again third place behind The Owl and Laveno, but finishing in front of Kirkconnel.

The Premier of England can be prouder over the victory of Ladas, as he bred Vista, the dam of yesterday's hero. Vista carried also the Rosebery colors to victory in several important races. As a 2-year-old she won the Prince of Wales Nursery Plate at Doncaster, seven furlongs, and the Bristol Mile Nursery Handicap, As a 3-year-old won the great Metropolitan Stakes, two and one-quarter miles, at Epsom, and the Great Yorkshire Handicap, one and one-eighth miles, at Doncaster. Her stud career did not begin auspictously. The first two foals were of no account, and therefore Lord Rosebery decided to sell her yearling colt of 1855 by Hend Or. Mr. C. D. Rose bought the colt at the Newmarket July sales in 1850 for 11,250. This colt turned out to be Bona Vista, winner of the 2,000 Guineas in 1852, defeating Sir Hugo, St. Angelo, Goldfinch, El Diablo, and others. Vista is a grandly-bred mare by Macaroin, her dam, Verdure, by King Tom, was a full sister to Corisande (winner of the Cesarewitch and other races), and to Mr. August Belmont's imported mare Lady Mentmore, dam of Rica, owned by Mr. A. J. Cassatt, of Chesterbrook Stud, Pennsylvania, and Mehaliah, now the property of Mr. Marcus Duly, of Anaconda, Mont. Her dam was May Bloom, by Newminster; third dam the dam of Birdfull sister to Thormaby (winner of the Bersty in 1850), by Windhound, out of the great race-mare Alice Hawthorn.

There are two full sisters to Vista in this country. They are Judith and Clover, both imported by the late Congressman W. L. Scott, of the Algeria Stud. At the dispersal of his stud in 1852 Mr. August Belmont bought Clover, then 14 years older, went to Mr. E. S. Gardiner, of the Avendale Stud, for $2,500, Whereas Judith, a year older, went to Mr. E. S. Gardiner, of the Avendale Stud, for $2,000, Judith is the dam of Julien, a promising young stallion by Rayon d'Or, and Clover has thrown Flageoletta, Aftermath, and Grellan.

Sir Visto is the first Derby winner got by the defunct Barcaldine, Barcaldine, but made his name through Mimi, winner of the 1,000 Guineas and Oaks in 1859.

TOM BYRNES' CAREER

THE CELEBRATED EX-CHIEF OF POLICE OF NEW YORK.

His Arbitrary Powers-He Associated with Criminals-Some of His Methods of Making Them Confess-

The New York Sun gives the following sketch of Thomas Byrnes, the Chief of Police of that c'ty, who has just been retired on a pension: Thomas Byrnes was born in this city 1842. He learned the trade of gas-fitting, and worked at it until he went to the war, in 1861, with Ellsworth's Zouaves. He joined the police force on December 10, 1865; was made roundsman October 22, 1868; sergeant, November 24, 1869; captain. July 1, 1870; inspector, April 23, 1880; chief inspector, April 15, 1888, and superintendent, April 12, 1892. He did his first duty in the Fifteenth Precinct, and he was in command of that precinct, with its headquarters in Mercer street, when he did the piece of work which took him finally into the Detective Bureau, and later into fame and power. This was the capture of the Manhattan Savings Bank robbers and the recovery of the stolen Byrnes was soon afterward set to reorganize the Detective Bureau, Within six weeks he was appointed inspector, and began to discipline the force and to re-enforce his hold on the place and its opportunities at once. One of the first orders he put forth was one prohibiting any man in his department from opening his mouth about po-lice business. Thereafter every "story" of crime and crime detected which came from the Detective Bureau was told by from the Detective Bureau was told by Byrnes himself. From the noment he stepped into power he made it his business to teach criminals that certain kinds of crimes must not be committed here. Highway robbery, bank burgiaries, or important burgiaries of any kind, systematic forgeries, counterfeiting, and a lot of other crimes were prohibited, and, to of other crimes were prohibited, and, to the credit of the system which Mr.

Byrnes created to suppress them, have never been allowed to gain a foothold in this city since he has been in power in the Police Department. The old force of detectives which he found in the bureau he got rid of almost to a man. He took new men from the ranks and taught them his method, and each man became an efficient part of the machine.

If any one supposes that Mr. Byrnes's methods of discovering the authors of crime were like those of a Sherlock Holmes he is much mistaken, Mr. Byrnes is a man of force, and not finesse. His business was to check the actions of certain thleves and other criminals. Te do is in thieves and other criminals. To do this, he made it his business to know criminals. In the early eighties, when Theodore Roosevelt began his political Theodore Roosevelt began his political career, and led a legislative committee to this city to investigate the Police Department. Mr. Byrnes was a witness before them. He surprised the committeemen by saying that he spent two hours a day in the company of thieves. "I'm in their company now," he said, looking around the chamber. "If you lost your watch you would not expect me to go to some eminent divine to get it, but to use my acquaintance with the thieves."

He did not go out in the streets to talk o thieves, nor did he have them calling opon him as honored guests, he ex-plained, but it was in interviewing thieves when they were brought in to him as suspects that he spent the twelfth part of each day. ARBITRARY POWERS. Armed with a power under the law to make arbitrary arrests, to lock men, or women, either, in the cells under the marble headquarters building, and to keep them there close prisoners for twentyhours, not even admitting presence there, or permitting a relative or friend to approach them, he was able or friend to approach them, he was able to get almost any information out of a criminal caught in his net that he wanted an associate, or even against Byrnes himself is authority for the manner in which he forced a confession from the man Unger, who murdered his friend and afterward cut and sawed up

"I was criticised for what I did in this said, afterward, "but I was precase," he said, afterward, "but I was prepared to defend my actions. Unger was a big, stolid, heavy-jawed fellow—as stubborn and reticent as any man I ever saw, I could get nothing out of him, and I lid not seem to be able to make any impression upon him. So I got the blood-stained lounge upon which he had cut up his friend, the knife, the saw, and the hammer, with which he killed him, and put all of these things in the little, narrow cell with him. Well, in thirty minutes be was trying to break out of his cell, to get away from these things. He was well ready to confess."

Byrnes treated the thieves brought before him with the utmost contempt. He spoke of them as "contagious diseases on the highaway."

"I never let them feel as if they were as big as a double acc," he has said. "When they come to me whining about their intention to lead honorable lives, I say: "None of that here. You are a thier, and you and I know it. Steal all you can, but if you try it in New York I'll land you where you belong." If it happened that a thief of any note came to town, and did not report to him, he would send for him sak him hay be dared to come here. ared to defend my actions, Unger was a thief of any note came to town, and did not report to him, he would send for him, ask him how he dared to come here, and what he meant to do here, and confront him with his record.

"I'd make him feel that he did not amount to as much as a fly buzzing at the window," the late Chief has said, he kept a corps of stool-pigeons constantly in the employment of his department to make the acquaintance of and ment, to make the acquaintance of and to betray thieves, and the thieves them-selves were pensioners of his. "There never was a thief broke," said Byrnes, "and came to me but what I gave him money. Not a week passes but one asks me for money, and gets it, and I always get my money's worth back tenfold."

It was to keep track of all the different kinds of professional criminals who infest this city and its neighborhood that Byrnes organized his force. One lot of men looked after one class of criminals, and other lots of the other sorts, each lot of detectives having its specialty in crime and criminals. Between Byrnes and his men and the thieves there grew up a feeling not unlike friendship.

KNOW THEIR BUSINESS.

KNOW THEIR BUSINESS.

"They know what their business is and they know what my business is," said Byrnes. "They speak of me with a term of endearment which would not look well in print, but they usually add that I am square with them." Byrnes wants to send everybody to jail, they say, but as long as we don't steal in New York he don't bother us, and he don't take what we've got except by process of law." I don't molest them unless I want them is somebody else wants me to get them. Otherwise, If they keep out of the way, I've no cause to trouble them beyond keeping an eye on them from day to day."

A professional thief had few rights left in Mr. Byrnes's eye, It was upon this principle that he acted upon each pf the occasions of great gatherings in his city since the funeral-day of General Grant. Upon each occasion he issued a proclamation warning criminals that if they were seen upon the streets on any of these days they would be summarily. proclamation warning criminals that if they were seen upon the streets on any of these days they would be summarily arrested and kept locked up until the show was over. If magistrates discharged the prisoners after he had kept them the lime allowed by law before arraignment, which is anything less than twenty-four hours, he threatened to rearrest the men of the court.

In his methode there was nothing of the Vidocy. His won story of how he got the vidence to convict young McGloin store the vidence that th forty-five minutes, and at the end of each fifteen minutes one after another of his accomplices was taken across the courtyard as if he had just been arrested. Not a word was said by me. He kept asking me what I wanted of him, and what he had done. As each of the two first of his accomplices was brought in I could see him start. Then a pawabroker came into the room and handed me the pisiol, with which the murder was done. The pawn-broker went out, and I sat there playing with the pistoi. Just then Blanfield, the last of the accomplices, was brought through the yard handcuffed to a detective. McGloin dropped to his knees in en agony of terror, and begged me to save him from the gallows."

and I sat there playing with the pistoi. Just then Blanfield, the last of the accomplices, was brought through the yard handcuffed to a detective. McGioin dropped to his knees in an agony of terror, and begged me to save him from the gallows."

Such methods were effective against professional criminals, and few cities in the world have such a record of freedom from the operation of this class as New York has had since Byrnes became a power. But for the direction of sposardic crime they fail, and this city has a long record of unsolved murder mysteries.

The exclusion of crooks from Wall street was one of the Inspector's earliest acts of importance. About II o'clock on the same day that he was appointed to take charge of the Detective Bureau he went down town and hired a room at his own expense at 17 Wall street. The next morning he selected nine of his best men and sent them to his new office, to cover that section of the city. He gave specific orders to his men to arrest any their who might be found within the district who could not give a good account of himself as being there for a legitimate purpose. It was not long before the president of the Stock Exchange Invited Inspector Byrnes to take possession of and establish his business in a room of the Exchange. This invitation was accepted, and ten detectives are constantly on hand in that building. Connections to this office were made by telephone and establish his business in a room of the Exchange. This invitation was ac-cepted, and ten detectives are constantly on hand in that building. Connections to this office were made by telephone and telegraph with every large banking house in the city. So complete is the system established that on receipt of a call a detective can be sent from the office call a detective can be sent from the office to almost any place in the lower part of the city in three minutes. There is, in fact, no more perfect system of detective supervision in any part of the world, and as a consequence thieves have since given Wall street a wide berth. As Chief of the Detective Bureau Byrnes obtained from the Legislature powers which made him independent even of the police commissioners; as Chief inspector he got an extra salary, and was ex-efficio the head of the Detective Bureau. He is probably sorry now that he powers which made him independent even of the police commissioners; as Chief Inspector he got an extra salary, and was ex-efficio the head of the Detective Bureau. He is probably sorry now that he ever took a higher place. During the eighteen months or more before Superintendent Murray was retired, when he was on sick leave, it was well understood that Byrnes held the key to the situation and was making his own terms. He refused to be made Superintendent unless he could retain his hold on the betective Bureau. And it was not until it was agreed that McLaughlin, whom he had educated, should be advanced to an inspectorship, jumped over the heads of Williams, Conlin, and McAvoy, and put in charge of the Detective Bureau, and that the law should be changed to permit this by abolishing the place of Chief Inspector, that he would consent to be promoted. As Superintendent he has had no end of troubles with the commissioners, on one side, and, of late, with the Parkhurstians, simultaneously, on the other. His offer of his resignation to Mayor Strong, before the latter took office, was one of the sensations of the Lexow investigation. That Byrnes is rich, he has owned. He has a fine house in Fifty-eighth street near the Plaza, and a handsome country place at Red Bank, on the Shrewsbury river. That he has hosts of rich and influential friends is also without question. It was these men—Jay Gould, Commodore Vanderbilt, and others—who gave him the chances to make money.

Rendiness of Wit. (Harper's Round Table.)

It seems that in the year 1707, when Philip V. was on his way to Madrid to take possession of his kingdom of Spain, the inhabitants of Mont de Marsan came out to meet him at his approach. The two processions having met about a leave from the town the Mayor adtwo processions having met about a league from the town, the Mayor advanced toward the litter in which the King sat, and addressed him as follows: "Sire, long speeches are obnoxious and wearisome; I should prefer to sing you something." Leave was given, and he sang forthwith a short ode to the King, which so pleased his Majesty that he called out, "Da capo!" (encore). The Mayor gave his song a second time. The King thanked the singer, and presented him with ten louis d'or. This amount seemed hardly sufficient to the chief magistrate of Mont de Marsan, and he, therefore, promptly held out his empty hand to the King, and, in admirable imitation of the King, and, in admirable imitation of the King's voice, himself called out, "Da capo!" The King laughed heartily, and compiled, and the Mayor departed twice as well off as he would have been had he been less quick-witted.

Nervous Tired, "I was feeling as miserable as any one could feel, tired all the time, many times unable to go out on the street even after unable to go out on the street even after I had started. If I went up one flight of stairs I felt as though I should fail. I had palpitation of the heart and suffered greatly with catarrh of the head and throat. I finally decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilis, and soon felt better. I used the third bottle and I then felt like a different person. I hope others in ill health will do as I did. It you take Hood's Sarsaparilia and use it faithfully I am sure you will be benefited. I have also found Hood's Pills to be of great benefit and I highly recommend them."
